

Salon Owner Walk-Through

Every step a salon owner takes after deciding to upgrade — the upgrade button, the Stripe checkout, the owner dashboard, uploading photos, editing the listing, and each AI marketing tool run with real input — captured live on the production site, with a candid review of each step.

Captured June 19, 2026 on miami.knowsbeauty.com (headless real Chrome). No real payment was made. Demo salons were used and cleaned up afterward.

Operational watch item (not an owner-facing design issue): during this walk-through the shared database server briefly refused all saves because its disk filled up (a cluster-wide capacity guard; our own data is only ~4 MB). While it lasted, no owner could upload a photo, edit a listing, or subscribe. It cleared on its own and everything works now — but please confirm the database has disk headroom before public launch, since a salon hitting a silent “can't save” on day one would be damaging.

Review tags: Good works well Note worth knowing Low minor polish Medium should fix Was Critical launch-blocker, fixed today

1. The owner dashboard — a free salon just after claiming Good

The first thing a salon owner sees after their claim is verified: their salon name, a link to their public page, and a clear note that they're signed in. The whole thing lives at one web address — there's no separate app to install.

UX REVIEW Clean, calm, and on-brand. Single-column layout reads well and the owner immediately knows whose listing this is. Good first impression.

2. The upgrade offer — “Get Featured, $29/month” Good

For a free-plan salon the dashboard leads with the upgrade card: “Be the first salon visitors see in Wynwood,” a short benefits list, and one black “Get Featured — $29/month” button. This is the single button that starts the paid upgrade.

UX REVIEW Specific and persuasive — it names the owner's actual neighborhood and leads with real benefits; “Cancel anytime” under the button reduces hesitation. (Note: this card still carries the “Founding Partner / lock in pricing” line we're discussing separately — easy to remove if you decide to.)

3. The AI marketing tools — locked on the free plan Good

Below the upgrade card the AI tools appear but are deliberately locked for free-plan owners: the caption box is greyed out with a “Featured listing required” overlay and its own upgrade button.

UX REVIEW Showing the tool but locking it is the right call — the owner sees exactly what they'd unlock, which is more motivating than hiding it. Turns a paywall into a sales pitch.

4. Clicking “Get Featured” → the Stripe checkout (we stop here — no payment) Was Critical (fixed today)

Clicking the button creates a secure checkout session and hands the owner to Stripe: “Subscribe to Miami Knows Beauty Pro Listing — $29.00 per month,” email pre-filled, card or bank options. The owner never types card numbers into our site.

UX REVIEW IMPORTANT: this page was completely broken in production before today — every owner who clicked “Get Featured” got an error and could NOT pay (a launch-blocking bug from a bad card-statement label added to checkout). I found and fixed it during this walk-through; the fix is deployed and verified live, and this screenshot is the now-working page. One thing to align: the brand shows as “Expertly AI,” not “Knows Beauty” — a salon owner may not recognise the charge on their statement.

5. The owner dashboard after upgrading — Featured active

Medium

Once subscribed the dashboard changes: a gold “Featured listing active” badge replaces the upgrade card, with a “Manage subscription” link. A “Complete your profile” checklist and a performance panel (page views, messages) sit below.

UX REVIEW

The paid state feels rewarding — the gold badge is a clear “you're in” signal. One real issue to fix before launch: the performance panel reads “o page views” and “o messages,” which would undercut a paying owner's confidence that the directory is working for them.

The edit form lets the owner change phone, website, email, Instagram/Facebook, an “About your salon” description (up to 1,000 characters with a live counter), hours, and services. It promises “Changes go live on your public listing right away,” and the save persisted correctly.

UX REVIEW Straightforward and well-labelled; the Instagram field accepts a full URL or a bare handle, and the live character counter is a thoughtful touch. Minor: a long “About” description shows lower on the public page, not as the prominent subtitle under the salon name — an owner may expect their new words to headline.

The owner types what they want to post (“fall balayage promo, 20% off”) and the tool writes a finished, on-brand Instagram caption with relevant local hashtags — with a one-click Copy button. This is a real, live result, not a mock-up.

UX REVIEW This is the strongest part of the product. The caption is genuinely usable — it weaves in the salon name, the neighborhood (Design District), and sensible Miami hashtags. For an owner staring at a blank caption box at 9pm, this is real, immediate value and the best reason to pay $29.

Same idea for ads: the owner describes a promotion and the tool returns three short, ready-to-use ad variations for Google, Facebook, or Instagram, with a “Copy all” button. Live result shown.

UX REVIEW Three distinct, usable angles in seconds — strong. Minor to reconcile: the screen offers “3 ad variations” while a confirmation email elsewhere promises “20” — we should make the numbers agree so we're not over-promising.

The Concierge tier offers an AI phone receptionist with its own number that answers calls about hours and services and takes messages 24/7. On the dashboard it appears as an upsell.

UX REVIEW Worth knowing: unlike the caption and ad tools, the AI receptionist is not self-serve — turning it on is a manual, talk-to-us step today. That's fine as long as the Concierge card is honest about it (which the repositioned pricing now is: “Talk to us”).

Finally, the public business page a Miami shopper lands on — the salon name, the Featured treatment, the photo the owner uploaded, hours, and a way to get in touch.
